Sample GRE Questions (continued)

Reading Comprehension

One of several frames of reference utilized by living creatures in the effort at orientation is the direction of gravity. In human beings, this orientation is provided by the vestibular system of the inner ear, a labyrinth of chambers comprising the semicircular canals, the utricle, and the saccule. The three semicircular canals
Line 5 are oriented perpendicularly to one another and provide the locus of balance.

In essence, these canals form a system of Cartesian coordinate axes along which the brain maps the body's horizontal, vertical, and lateral displacements. A mass of particulate material presses down on membranes, further allowing the mind to register linear motion and the direction of gravity. By utilizing this system of Line 10 mental signals, we manage to maintain a sound sense of orientation despite the fact that our heads are seldom perfectly perpendicular to the plane of gravitational pull.

Yet this complex system has its imperfections. As anyone will attest, watching television while lying sideways is taxing on the brain, while reading at the same inclination is all but impossible (without tilting the book to match the angle Line 15 of sight). Another instance of the system's failure is motion sickness.

When signals from the retina's frame and signals from the inner ear's frame fail to coincide, the result is motion sickness. The brain is flooded with contradictory signals: while the eye indicates that the body is at rest, the inner ear signals just the opposite. The simple cure for this is to restore both systems of Line 20 signals to synchrony. This is accomplished by redirecting the gaze to the exterior of the moving vehicle, allowing the eye to match the information contributed by the vestibular system.

5. According to the passage, motion sickness is induced by
  - (A) delayed compensation of the vestibular system
  - (B) asynchronous pairing of information from two systems
  - (C) the non-perpendicular orientation of the head with respect to the body
  - (D) a failure to register linear motion and the direction of gravity
  - (E) disorientation caused by pressure in the inner ear
6. It can be inferred from the passage that the utricle and the saccule are solely
  - (A) responsible for the maintenance of balance
  - (B) correct for gravitational orientation
  - (C) provide axes of spatial orientation
  - (D) are integral with the semicircular canals
  - (E) function only in tandem with visual signals
7. The main function of the passage as a whole is to
  - (A) account for the failure of the vestibular system of the inner ear
  - (B) reconcile discordant theories about spatial orientation
  - (C) investigate the impact of stresses on the vestibular system of the inner ear
  - (D) consider the limitations of one bodily system
  - (E) describe the various frames of reference used to orient the body

Answers: 1. B 2. E 3. B 4. B 5. B 6. D 7. E

GRE Subject Tests

What are the Subject Tests?

The subject tests are given separately from the GRE general test. These tests remain paper-based, scheduled tests and require additional fees. The subject tests are developed to assess your understanding and level of study in a particular subject area and thus quantifying your qualifications as a potential graduate student in that field. Depending upon which graduate programs you are interested in, you may or may not have to take a subject test. Check with the graduate schools to which you are applying to see if any of these extra tests are required for admission.

How are these Subject Tests scored?

The subject tests are scored on various scales. You will be given an overall score, a percentile range, and a subscore for the various areas of study in that particular subject. To gain a more detailed description for your particular subject, please consult the GRE website: www.gre.org.

Are there any additional tests I have to take?

Most likely yes. Most international students will need to take the TOEFL as part of their admissions requirements. Though minimum score requirements differ among institutions, most schools will have one; contact the schools to which you are applying to find out more.
